March is a busy month for your AGA chapter. It is time for our annual spring professional development training offering 8 ours of CPE for the low cost of $50 for members and $70 for nonmembers. The chapter will host two webinars for two hours of CPE, free to members. In addition, National AGA is hosting a members only free webinar for two CPE hours, free for members from your own computer. And it is CGFM month where we acknowledge our CGFM's and the Governor has issued a proclamation to acknowledge March as CGFM month. Take advantage of all the activities your chapter has to offer.

Anshu

What does success look like?

1. Measure success in happiness, not wealth.
2. Commit your goals to paper. A "to-do" list is subtle positive psychology.
3. Invest only in the pursuit of your goals.
 - a. Be prepared to make sacrifices.
 - b. Challenge yourself to hard things.
 - c. Work harder than those around you.
 - d. Make complacency your enemy.
4. Listen to constructive criticism and the opinion of others.
5. Learn from failure.
 - a. Reevaluate planning.
 - b. Reevaluate your preparation.
 - c. Reevaluate your execution.
 - d. Focus on the variables in your control.
6. Attitude is key. Take charge of your own outlook and use positivity as a way of identifying opportunities.
7. Make a commitment to achieve every single day.

INFRASTRUCTURE FINANCING WITH STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNEMENT

Local governments play a key role in funding, operating and maintaining infrastructure; however, governments are facing a serious infrastructure deficit and are struggling to find new ways to finance the needed expansions, upgrades and repairs. Meeting the infrastructure financing challenge has emerged as one of the most urgent issues facing the country. To bridge the financing gaps, local governments have turned to creative ways of financing public infrastructure investments.

CYBERSECURITY

For non-information technology personnel, cybersecurity can be a labyrinth of strange concepts, acronyms and techno-babble that is at best confusing and at worst terrifying. All of us rely on technical staff to secure our systems and data, and unless you are a trained IT professional, the details of cybersecurity will likely remain something of a mystery. However, a little familiarity with the fundamentals will go a long way. This session will provide a basic understanding of cybersecurity concepts and will empower the personnel who own the data and depend on the systems to better collaborate with their IT staff to ensure the integrity, availability and confidentiality of financial data.

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT DATA ANALYTICS

In the world of work, it is important to measure things. Data analytics is a large area of practice. There are data related to large query searches; data related to marketing efforts; and data related to agency and financial usefulness in making decisions. All of these are an integral part of what we do on a regular basis in our work lives.

The central idea of data analytics is taking data sets or groups of information and analyzing them in a meaningful way to determine something useful in government. Measurements are taken related to the economy, the census and so on. A general understanding about how data is used to create meaningful information for decision-making is important.

Analytics: Aside from meaning "to analyze," analytics is the process of examining, comparing and learning from information.

Data: It may seem obvious that data is information. When people talk about data, they are referring to sets or groups of numbers. Sets of numbers themselves or numbers connected to other information certainly comprise a great deal of what is referred to as data.

Quantity vs. Quality

The amount of something measured is a good definition of quantity. I realize that this is an elementary explanation. However, consider something like the number of times an employee completes something satisfactorily or poorly. How about the number of days of good weather needed per month to complete a project. Qualitative questions arise such as, "How is the term 'good' defined?" Other questions are, "What types of tasks and how many in a day are considered important to the stated goal?"

Percentage

A percentage is basically comparing one thing to another. An example is the number $1/3$ which is the number 1 compared to the number 3. This is simply stated, but let me expand on this concept and consider something like productivity. You could compare the number of people in your department to the funding available. This would yield a percentage, dollar or number result as you determine which is most useful. You could then compare this result to your department's output which could be projects completed, customers served, etc.

Same Period Last Year (SPLY)

This is a measurement of a current amount versus the same amount at this time last year. It is a basic and direct way to see how you are doing with your budget. Comparing current year and prior year provides useful information as you make plans to move forward.

Budget vs. Actual

Budget versus actual is an indicator of how well a department's actual expenses perform compared to their budget. The importance of this measure is to make adjustments in either the budget for the next period or in adjusting actual expenditures to more closely reflect the budget.

Variance

Variance is the difference in the budget versus an actual amount expressed as a percentage. Remember that a percentage is comparing one thing to another. So here, we are comparing the budget amount versus actual amount and then making a qualitative determination as to whether that amount is significant to make adjustments for the next period.

In government, measurements are taken about the economy, citizens and so on. The central idea of data analytics is taking datasets or groups of information and analyzing them in a meaningful way to determine something useful. In today's world, it is important to be able to analyze sets of information. Data analytics encompasses various types of information. The key is to determine the best tool or method to measure the data that is integral to your needs.

A DIFFICULT REALITY FOR THOSE WHO WANT TO RUN GOVERNMENT MORE LIKE A BUSINESS

Michael Granss, Executive Editor, Route Fifty

Compared to the private sector, public sector organizations will always be at a disadvantage when it comes to this management pain point.

It's a common refrain heard among some voters and candidates pursuing elected office: "Why can't government be run more like a business?"

That's a complicated question, naturally, and answers can't be easily boiled down into a TV-friendly sound bite or campaign slogan—though plenty have tried. Here's one area where small-government ideology barrels head-long into a real-world reality: The difference in what the public and private sectors can pay to attract top talent.

In Toledo, Ohio, The Blade recently reported that Mayor Wade Kapszukiewicz has told civic leaders that salary caps imposed by the city council for certain city positions has created problems recruiting for key leadership posts in his administration. That included finding a chief of staff, whose salary was capped at $119,129. The Toledo City Council approved a request from the mayor to increase the chief of staff salary cap to $125,000. (The new chief of staff starts on March 5.)

Late last year, when Kapszukiewicz was mayor-elect, he told a room full of Toledo business leaders about the salary constraints, the private sector reaction was one of disbelief. "The room guffawed. It was a rumbling guffaw of laughter," the mayor told The Blade. "They just looked at each other and couldn't believe what the salaries were."

It's not uncommon for low pay to prompt key city hall and state government staffers to bolt for the private sector. When Pittsburgh Mayor Bill Peduto's chief of staff, Kevin Acklin, resigned his $107,000-a-year position in December, he cited higher salaries in the private sector and the need to better support his family.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette compared Acklin's salary to other mayoral chiefs of staff and found that "his salary is indeed relatively low for his job." Allentown and Harrisburg, which have smaller populations than Pittsburgh, have higher salaries for their respective mayors' chiefs of staff.

To sample a couple other mid-size cities: In Richmond, Virginia, with a population of 220,000 residents, Mayor Levar Stoney's chief of staff has a $125,000 salary. In Birmingham, Alabama, which has a population of around 210,000 people, the salary of the Mayor Randall Woodfin's chief of staff in 2016 was $160,000, which was more than the mayor's own salary.

Toledo has a population of approximately 280,000 residents. "Taxpayers of Toledo are understandably interested in making sure that their tax money is being spent wisely, and there is always a reticence to increase the taxpayer-supported salary of any government employee. I get that," Kapszukiewicz told The Blade. "But going through this process truly helped me understand that we are missing out on talent because the wages we pay are utterly noncompetitive."

While Toledo's new mayor may have had a wake-up call when it came to the city's uncompetitive salary constraints, many government leaders and human resources managers are well familiar with this particular pain point.

It's not just an issue for top administration and agency postings. It's common throughout state and local government workforces. According to Route Fifty's 2018 Management Survey, a majority of state and local government respondents did not agree with the statement: "My organization is competitive with the private sector in our ability to attract and hire talent." That sentiment was common across rural, suburban and urban areas and throughout state and local government. In fact, nearly three-fourths of state government respondents disagreed with the statement on recruiting and hiring top talent.

It's an issue that's especially challenging when it comes to filling positions in cybersecurity and other areas of government technology management, as Route Fifty has previously reported.

Last October, Stanton Gatewood, Georgia's chief information security officer, told a gathering of the National Association of State Chief Information Officers in Austin, Texas that the "private sector is sucking the public sector dry everyday."

March is
CGFM Month

WHEREAS, the Greater Lansing Chapter and West Michigan Chapter of the Association of Government Accountants (AGA) are professional organizations, part of the Association of Government Accountants which has a network of 15,000 members in 100 chapters in the United States and around the world and approximately 200 active members representing state, federal, municipal and private sector accountants, auditors, and financial managers in Michigan; and,

WHEREAS, AGA Greater Lansing Chapter and West Michigan Chapter members have responded to AGA's mission of Advancing Government Accountability, as it continues its broad educational efforts, with emphasis on high standards of conduct, honor, and character in its Code of Ethics, and are making significant advances both in professional ability and in service to the residents of Michigan by mastering increasingly technical and complex requirements; and,

WHEREAS, the Certified Government Financial Manager (CGFM) program of AGA provides a means of demonstrating professionalism and competency by requiring CGFM candidates to have appropriate educational and employment history, to abide by AGA's Code of Ethics and to pass three examinations requiring expertise in Governmental Environment, Governmental Financial Management and Control and Governmental Accounting, Financial Reporting and Budgeting. The program also requires that each CGFM maintain certification by completing at least 80 hours of continuing professional education in government financial management topics or related technical subjects every two years;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Rick Snyder, governor of Michigan, do hereby proclaim March 2018 as Certified Government Financial Manager (CGFM) Month in Michigan.

INTRODUCING YOURSELF WITH A PERFECT PITCH

By: Lily Whiteman, GovLoop.com

What do you do for a living and where do you work? You've probably been asked those two simple questions innumerable times during job interviews, varied professional events, and social, alumni and family gatherings. But have you ever carefully prepared compelling answers to those questions?

If not, consider doing so. Why? Because no matter what your job is and no matter who you discuss it with, you can either describe your work in ho-hum, forgettable terms or in zesty, impressive terms that may help you open professional and social doors--or at least spark interesting conversations.

For example, when you meet new people at networking events, you could introduce yourself by stating your name, job title and employer. Though acceptable, such an introduction is also about as revealing as the standard "name, rank and serial number" statement issued by POWs to their captors under the Geneva Convention. Alternatively, if circumstances permit, you could provide an enlightening, high-impact description about your work that would provide grist for a lively exchange.

Here is an example of an engaging, conversational work description: I'm a science writer at the National Research Foundation, which funds most U.S academic research on science and technology—much of it turns out to be game-changing. For example, the Foundation funded the research that led to crime-busting DNA fingerprinting. I translate Foundation research into reader-friendly multi-media materials for the public. I enjoy working for a research organization because it's like being in school—but I get paid to learn instead of taking out loans to learn. Today, I wrote the script for a video about increasing giant population explosions of jellyfish called "Jellyfish Gone Wild!"

Tips on describing your job:

- Stay positive and enthusiastic. No whining or complaining to strangers!
- Explain why your work is important and matters.
- Tailor your pitch to your audience by emphasizing what aspects of your work would interest your audience most. For example, during job interviews explain how your job(s) has prepared you to excel on your target job. Describe examples of completed projects that parallel the demands of your target job and provide tangible, objective evidence of your success. Explain how you strategically conquered obstacles and challenges, met deadlines and stretched/maximized resources.
- Tell (short) stories when possible and appropriate. Why? Because stories that are conceptually united by a dramatic narrative are verbal Velcro that sticks to the listener's brain; they are memorable. Maintain a list of dynamic work-related stories involving varied types of management/supervisory challenges and successes and humorous anecdotes for use in diverse professional and personal contexts.
- Use easy-to-understand language. Purge acronyms and technical terms. In most cases, assume no previous knowledge about your field, employer or projects. The easier your pitch is to understand and the more it targets your audience's interests, the longer it will maintain your audience's attention.
- Stay positive and enthusiastic. No whining or complaining to strangers!
- In conversational settings, encourage dialogue by asking about the other person's work. For example, ask him/her what achievements stand out as personal highlights of his career, so far.
- Bring your business cards wherever you go.
- Open with an attention-grabbing fact.

AGA Resources – Performance and Accountability

Intergov features AGA tools by you, for you! They are designed to help government financial management professionals do their jobs better. Intergov features tools that officials from any level of government can use to improve program performance and enhance government accountability.

These tools can be used to prevent fraud, reduce improper payments, improve outcomes, mitigate risk, and enhance collaboration. These tools can be used by auditors, accountants, grant managers, IT professionals, program managers, and others.

Many of the tools included in Intergov were developed by AGA's Intergovernmental Partnership, which includes experienced and knowledgeable professionals from all levels of government. AGA sponsors the partnership as practical good-government initiative that provides a neutral setting for sharing ideas and best practices. Members of the partnership developed these tools to address areas that our members found challenging. It is AGA's hope that this toolbox becomes the go-to resource for a broad cross-section of government professionals.

Visit agacgfm.org/Intergov to learn more and access the toolkits.
